FRIENDS LEGAL™

We're On Your Side

Why Should You Have A Will?

The why is easy – to protect those you love. Be that your partner, your children, stepchildren, siblings or friends.

Making a Will means you can put in place both the financial and guardianship measures that are necessary to provide for your family after your death.

You may need to consider appointing a guardian or creating a trust fund for younger children. You may wish to incorporate an element of tax planning into your Will, to ease the inheritance tax burden, or simply protect the family home for your partner.

What Happens When You Don't Have A Will?

Dying without a Will is called dying intestate. The law does step in, in that situation, but your loved ones have to go through a time consuming and often costly process to ensure your estate is dealt with under the law of succession. This means that the law, not you, decides who is responsible for administering your estate and who inherits it. Dying without a will means that your assets may not go to those closest to you.

For instance, if you aren't married to your partner or have stepchildren who are not formally adopted, they may be excluded from inheriting anything. The easiest way to ensure that this doesn't happen is to make a Will specifying who gets what.
